Dear Tostan Friends and Supporters,

November 2009

In two ground-breaking reports released this month, Tostan's model of community-led development was highlighted as an innovative and effective model for development and women's empowerment. The two reports, one published by the Center for Global Development (CGD) and the other by the International Center for Research on Women (ICRW), advocate for action based on the involvement of women and the importance of innovation in development.

The Jokko Initiative: Mobile Technology Amplifying Social Change

US Ambassador-at-large for Global Women's Issues Praises the Tostan Model

The Jokko Initiative, a Tostan partnership project with UNICEF,

At a US House of Representatives hearing on International Violence Against Women, US aims to harness the power of accessible mobile technology to better the lives of its participants in West Africa. Currently in the pilot stage, the initiative has already been hailed as bringing Tostan and UNICEF to the forefront of SMS-based innovation. To learn more about this exciting new project, visit the Jokko Initiative Blog by clicking here.

Ambassador-at-large for Global Women's Issues, Melanne Verveer, highlighted the Tostan model as an example of positive change for thousands of women in West and East Africa. Ambassador Verveer told representatives how Tostan empowers individuals to work together to identify problems in their communities and then mobilize to address them.
